them with all their rights of fishing and hunting; the concessions were made from him and his heirs to them and their heirs,[1] Roger's language almost implied that the Papal city was his.

In the latter months of 1137, only Apulia resisted the King. The tension of affairs grew less, and it was obvious to all serious-minded men that the schism must come to an end* Roger himself offered to arbitrate, after an interview with Bernard, whose disinterested sseal for the unity of the Church he found it as hard to resist as it was- impossible to escape the sting of the Abbot's words, [11] All Christendom favours Innocent, only you and your kingdom resist him," Roger's proposal was accepted; namely that three of Innocent's electors and three of Anacletus's should come to Salerno, where they should plead each their cause, and leave to the King the final judgment, For Innocent, there appeared at Salerno the Cardinals Almeric and Girard and the Abbot of Clairvaux; for Anacletus, the Cardinals Gregory, Peter of Pisa, and Matthew, For four days the case was thrashed out before the King; for his side, Bernard was naturally the spokesman, His defence of unity must have carried away even the partisans of Anacletus, were they not convinced that canonically Anacletus was as good a Pope as Innocent,
